Andy Warhol - Wikipedia

"Andy Warhol" is a song written by David Bowie in 1971 for the album Hunky Dory. It is an acoustic song about one of Bowie's early artist inspirations, the American pop artist Andy Warhol.. The album track opens with a series of strange electronic tones which fades into studio chatter in which producer Ken Scott mispronounces Warhol's name and Bowie repeatedly demonstrates how to say it properly.

This lesson serves as an icebreaker and introduction to critical response. Students think about an often-controversial work of art, Andy Warhol's Brillo Box, in order to judge for themselves what constitutes good art. Students use higher-level thinking skills to differentiate between tastes and biases and to listen to diverse perspectives, even if the perspectives differ from their own.
